Willow Green Opalescent

As fresh as a newly bloomed spring meadow to stimulate the senses. Our new Willow Green is based on the Florentine Green stretch glass from the early 1920's . . . with an opalescent effect that reflects a hint of yellow when exposed to different variations of light. Kim Plauché designed the wistful Angel's Blush floral. A sheer pink center on the soft petals makes this offering a natural complement to our Champagne Opalescent glass.

Mary Gregory

Fenton introduces four new Cranberry pieces to the already popular Mary Gregory collection. Distinctive shading of white enamel paint is used to bring these beautiful pieces to life. The pillar vase, featuring a little girl picking apples in her grandmother's backyard, is a brand new mould for the year 2000. Our collection also features an 18" lamp, a handled basket and a "Swan Lake" bell. Talented Fenton artists created the new "First Rain" pattern that graces the delicate basket.

The Centennial Collection

Beginning in 2000 and continuing each year leading up to our 100th anniversary in 2005, two family members will each select a signature piece, which has personal meaning to them, for the Fenton Centennial Collection. These pieces will represent a unique part of the family history in glass making. Each one will carry a card that tells the story of the special piece and its relationship to the family member. The inaugural year of this collection will feature pieces personally selected by second generation family members Bill and Frank Fenton.

This beautiful Burmese vase, made with a diamond optic mould, is a particular favorite of Bill Fenton. In fact, Bill has an extensive collection of items in diamond optic Burmese. Personal blooms of rose peonies are softened with fine, feather-blend brush strokes. Lilac buds further accentuate this lovely summer bouquet, designed especially for Bill's signature by Frances Burton.

Particularly fond of epergnes, Frank has selected a Victorian style epergne in historic Willow Green Opalescent, with antique brass and glass fittings, as his signature piece for this year collection. A petticoat crimp was used on each threaded horn - all supported by a crimped lily pad base. Our company first made this epergne in the 1940's for the L.G. Wright Glass Co. as a replica of the Victorian-style "flower stands" popularized by English and American glass companies from 1880 - 1910.

Topaz Opalescent Satin

A revival of the popular "Vaseline Glass" from the 1920's, Topaz has been a mainstay with our loyal collectors for a number of years. The addition of uranium in the glass formula gives this classic color its yellow hue which glows with a lively fluorescence when placed under black light. The straight rib optic and iridized satin finish add interest to these handmade creations.

Red Carnival

Red Carnival, one of Fenton's original iridescent hues, is the most sought after color by carnival glass collectors. Reheating the glass, also referred to as "striking", can create an unusual amberina effect in some pieces. Frances Burton's stylish Damask Rose design further beautifies this brilliant color. Debuting in 1996, this enduring pattern of muted Damask Roses continues to bring elegance to a timeless line of cherished keepsakes.

Sunset Stretch

The ever changing hues of sunset . . . from peachy-pink and orange blush to the beige-gold of twilight . . . all captured forever. Like a sunset, the shades vary and each handcrafted piece is unique. A similar color was first introduced in the mid 1920's as a stretch glass treatment. A special blend of metallic salts is sprayed on the hot glass before the piece is reheated and flared to its final shape. As the finisher flares the glass, it stretches the metal coating, resulting in the captivating "stretch" look.

Amethyst Carnival

Carnival glass – a Fenton Art Glass signature look since 1907, all the rage in the revival of Carnival in the 1970's and back to stay as a classic. A deep shade of amethyst glass played a vital role in the resurgence, with a complex crafting process starting with a spray of metallic salts while the glass is still hot. As more spray is applied to the glass, a spectacular rainbow of color emerges and Carnival glass is born. Fenton artist Robin Spindler designed a pattern of sweeping white blossoms that adds appeal to this classic look.
